Blown away by all the errors!

Bryce was in a huge rush when he wrote the first draft of today's Spin the Globe. We're sure that you always go back and check over your work, so we need you to fix a whole lot of mistakes.

Read Bryce's first draft, circle all the mistakes you come across and then write the corrections in the space provided on the right. There are at least 20 errors. Can you find more?

A typhoon is essentially a cyclone. In our part of the world we call them cyclones in the Indian or Western Pacific oceans they're called typhooons; and in the northern hemyspheer around the Caribbean Sea, they're called hurrycanes. Its the same big whether event with a different

Yagi smashed into the coastline of Vietnams northern provinces, sweeping boats out to sea and uprooting trees
Meanwhile over in the Caribbean, despite weather forecasters predicting a record season for hurricanes, its been eerily quite. Earie is a fancy word for strange, in an unsetling way. The seas there are unusualy calm for this time of year which has Meteorologists worried this is

Plurals and collective nouns

When there's more than one

Wouldn't it be nice if we could always just add an 's' to make things plural? Sadly, it's not that simple. Write the plural for these uncommon and irregular words. Stuck? Use a dictionary!

Collective nouns can change depending on what the animals or things are doing. For example:

- Penguins are called a colony when on land, but a raft when they're in water.
- Cows are a herd when grazing, but a drove when being moved.

Below are some animals and objects with different situations. For each situation, come up with your own collective noun. Be creative, but make sure it fits the context!

When sneaking around at night:	When scattered across the floor:
When playing with each other:	When being read by students:

Challenge: Create your own set of three situations for a group of animals, objects, or things, and come up with fun collective nouns for each!
